Old sheriff's substation may soon retire

■ Police hope to move into new facility next March, after a several-month setback caused by a change in bidding procedures.

POLICE CHIEF LARRY GORE

By Steve Marschke

The city of West Sacramento will have to use a lengthier public bidding process than originally planned, thus delaying the occupancy of a new police headquarters on Triangle Ct. until around March.

But plans for the new center are "progressing very nicely," said Chief of Police Larry Gore on Tuesday.

The $1.5 million project will entail the re-fitting of a building at 1001 Triangle Ct., in an attempt to consolidate operations from the department's investigative office and from the overcrowded, ramshackle and outdated police station on 4th St. in the Broderick neighborhood.

"The officers are anxious," said Gore. "They're very excited about having a nicer building to work in. Where they're working now is overcrowded and poorly functional, hindering intra-office communications and service to the public. They'll become even more excited when actual construction starts. They'll believe it when they see it."

The current 4th and C street police offices have been a sore spot for the department since the department formed when the city incorporated in 1987. Before that, the station had been a Yolo County sheriff's Department substation.

The new facilities on Triangle Ct. (near Jefferson Blvd. and between West Capitol Ave. and Sacramento Ave.) involve a deal which will bring several county services to the complex, in a project whose funding includes both the county and West Sacramento's redevelopment agency.

The Triangle Court site of West Sacramento's future police headquarters

"The building (for the new police station) is a 'tilt-up,'" Gore explained. "One part is an open bay, another part is a garage, and another part is a collection of offices. These plans call for keeping the shell of the building and gutting the insides, redesigning it into a functional police headquarters."

Four architectural firms are working on competing plans for the new building, and the design work is expected to be finished Thursday. The city will choose one winning design.

"When that's done, it will be used for the basis of construction of the project."

Originally planned for a fall-of-95 move-in date, actual completion is now expected around March of 1996.

Furnishing new digs:

By Steve Marschke

West Sacramento police are hoping for other community help in the outfitting of their new police headquarters on Triangle Ct.

Soroptimist International of West Sacramento has stepped up to raise funds for a "soft" interview room at the headquarters. The room will be made comfortable, pleasant and non-threatening so that police may question child witnesses, or victims who have been involved in traumatic events.

"That's just one example of what can be done," said Police Chief Larry Gore. "There are other ideas, like a weight room so our officers can keep themselves more physically fit. And we're going to always be looking for furniture. We're trying to do the whole project as economically as possible, considering the city's financial situation."

Anyone who canhelp is asked to call Lt. Bruce Muramoto at 372-2461.

Land tax sought to raise levees around West Sacramento

By Steve Marschke

West Sacramentans may be as enthusiastic about a new assessment district as they would about, for example, a good case of poison oak, recognizes Ken Ruzich.

But one such district now planned to help raise the city's flood protection level is a good deal, he maintains -- and residents will pay little or nothing more than they are now getting to work towards new levee improvements.

Ruzich is the director of Reclamation District 900, which includes the 80 percent of West Sacramento or so which lies south of the railroad tracks near Sacramento Ave. The district is in charge of preventing flooding of the city, by maintaining levees and pumping stormwaters. Together with local reclamation district 537, and with the City of West Sacramento, R.D. 900 has helped form a "Joint Powers Authority" to raise and widen the area's levees. The new work, recommended by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, is intended to protect West Sacramento from the kind of flooding expected to occur an average of every 200 to 400 years.

West Sacramento currently has "100-year flood protection," meaning is protected from floods expected more commonly than an average of once per century.

"A typical home will have to pay about $10 to $15 per year on the new assessment roll," said Ruzich. But residents already inside R.D. 900 will probably see their current assessments reduced by a like amount, countering the new assessment.

Properties will be taxed at the rate of 15 cents per $100 of assessed valuation for up to 12 years to pay for the $5 million project. But the assessed valuation will not be based on the county assessor's values for improved property; it will only be based on the size and use of the land.

"It's almost a flat value by acreage, but it does vary by use," said Ruzich. "The assessment value will be a valuation of the land, but not the market value or value of any improvements."

The project will receive 70 percent of its funding from the federal government. The state may help out with the remaining 30 percent -- and if it does, local property owners will only have to pay the JPA's assessment for four or five years instead of the full 12.

A public meeting on the new assessment will be held in West Sacramento at 6:30 p.m. on Wednesday, June 21, at the Turner Branch library. On June 27th, the Yolo County Board of Supervisors will consider the new tax roll the JPA plans to create.

And the Board of Directors of the JPA (which includes a city council member and a trustee from each reclamation district) will hold a public hearing to adopt the assessment plan in a July 26 meeting at 6:30 p.m. at the local library.

A brazen, petty, frequent little crime

By Steve Marschke

A couple of times a week, in the "wee hours" of the night, it goes something like this at a local convenience store:

Two or more juveniles or young adults step inside, and one distracts the clerk. The others grab a case or two of beer apiece, and they leave in a hurry, departing on foot or in cars. The clerk usually doesn't try to interfere -- that's a company policy to protect the employee's safety -- and the thieves get away.

Just another "beer run."

Although this crime is often repeated at several all-night mini-markets in West Sacramento, one store in particular seems to fall prey. The store's manager talked about the problem to the News-Ledger, but asked that his name and the store's name not be used.

"It happens once or twice a week," he said. "Between the hours of probably 8 p.m. and 2 a.m. Usually it's a couple of people or more. One distracts the clerk, and the others take the beer."

Usually there are no injuries. On Sunday morning at about 2 a.m., however, the clerk on duty at the market was shoved or struck in the upper back, his manager said.

"The clerk saw the customers near the beer racks and was trying to lock up the beer doors," said the manager. "We lock them up at 2 o'clock. He told them it was after two, he couldn't sell them. He was hit in the upper back area."

The clerk was not injured.

The manager said the store has tried posting a security guard during night hours, but that "hasn't done anything" to discourage the "beer runs."

When asked if he was afraid that someone will be seriously injured during one of these crimes, the manager responded, "I hope not. There's always that chance."

He added that the police perform extra patrols in the area, but haven't lucked out to catch the perpetrators in the act (occasionally, suspects are caught after the robberies).

He also said that it's "probably the same dozen-or-so suspects involved" in most of the beer runs.

Lt. Ron Moore of the West Sacramento Police Dept. said that such brazen, but petty, crimes have "been around for quite some time now."

He said the best way to prevent the problem is to make it hard for criminals to simply grab the beer from near a store's front door and flee.

"They should have it maybe in a lockbox where the clerk has to push a button to open it," said Moore. "It should never be right up in the front of the store. But sometimes, store owners take that advice and sometimes they prefer the advertising value of having the beer displayed in the front of the door, and they're willing to simply take that loss."

Moore said the crime was on the same level as shoplifting, except that the suspects in a "beer run" make little attempt to conceal what they are stealing. They're like shoplifters. Sometimes they don't pose a problem to people who arrest them and sometimes they do."

But is it a dangerous situation?

"Anytime a crime is occurring and you have a clerk who tries to prevent it, or the police are involved, there is a danger.

'Usually it's a couple of people or more. One distracts the clerk, and the others steal the beer.'

--Local store manager

Gateway, bike lanes on agenda

Two thorny West Sacramento issues have been rescheduled for discussions in front of the council.

One, a possible approval of the Gateway residential project in Southport (east of Jefferson and south of South River Road), will be heard at tonight's 7 p.m. city council meeting. Staff has suggested that the council approve the project under the condition that developers must later win the city's approval on traffic flow problems before they can build.

The other, the possible approval of a plan to add bicycle lanes to West Capitol Ave., has been tentatively slated for July 14. The plan, unanimously rejected last month, will be brought back at the request of councilmember Roland Hensley.

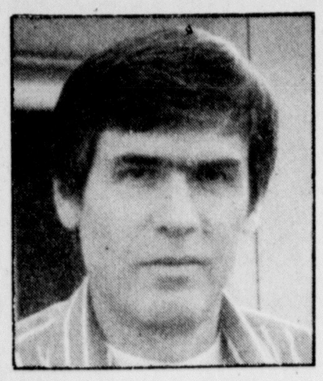
Guys & gals go through high school differently

My Back Pages



By Daryl Fisher

Another high school graduation weekend has come and gone. Seventeen and eighteen-year-old students all over the nation have marched down aisles, endured weeks of hearing Pomp and Circumstance being played over and over again, tried hard to write down something funny and memorable in all their friends' yearbooks, told a few select teachers they would actually miss them, gathered in as much hard-cold-cash as they could from all their relieved relatives, and spent at least one night absolutely determined to party-hearty until the sun came up.

No more will they be spending their noon hour in a quad or a socially segregated school cafeteria where the cheerleaders, athletes, intellectuals, those in school government, and even the hoodlums all had their special little set-aside areas where they gathered to eat and talk over their common problems and experiences.

And maybe best of all, no longer will the hardcore unpopular -- that unfortunate group of outcasts represented by the different, the soon to be really successful, the shy and introspective, and those too smart even for the intellectuals -- have to put up with a daily existence defined by the cruel and insensitive.

For my money, high school graduation (and the four often torturous years which lead up to it) is the most over-rated -- and yet somehow most fondly remembered -- rite of passage in any person's youth.

"My senior year in high school was the best year of my life," a recently converted feminist friend of mine told me with a nostalgic sigh last week.

"Really?" I said, kind of surprised that such a seemingly rational person's life had apparently peeked at seventeen.

"Don't you just love going to class reunions?" she asked.

"Not really," I admitted, recalling how I had to be dragged kicking and screaming to my last one.

"You're kidding," she said with interest.

"The only fun part," I said with a smile, "is that I get to be reminded how most of the really tough (mean is probably the better word) guys I went to high school with all seem to have completely disappeared from the face of the earth. I think what happened to them is that once everyone had graduated and got a real life, they all ended up on more or less the same street corner -- with no job or future and no one to beat on except each other."

"What are you talking about?" she asked impatiently.

"It's a guy thing," I assured her, seeing no need to go into the fact that for most young men, high school is about playing sports, trying to act cool, and avoiding being killed by your girlfriend's x-boyfriend.

"I hate it when you do that," she said.

"Do what?"

"Start to talk about something -- especially one of these so-called guy-things -- and then just stop. Why do men do that?"

"I don't do that," I said defensively.

"Oh yes you do -- all the time."

"It's just that I think high school is different for girls and guys," I said, knowing I was in trouble before the words were even out of my mouth.

"We are called WOMEN now," she explained very slowly, so I could hopefully grasp every word, "not girls!"

"Sorry."

"Anyway, how so?" she asked, perfectly willing to allow me to bring out all the rope I needed to hang myself.

"Well," I said, "in my opinion, girls -- I mean women -- and guys experience high school differently."

"Would you please be a little more specific?" she demanded very politely.

"Sure. Most of the girls -- women that is -- I knew in high school, were into things like getting good grades, meeting the right guy, going to the prom, getting along with their teachers, having slumber parties, cheering the team on to victory, yelling loud at spirit rallies, that sort of stuff."

"And what were the guys interested in," she asked with fire in her eyes.

"Surviving," I said, sure that she would find my one word answer quite profound.

"Surviving?" she asked, raising her voice. "Surviving what?"

A conversation like this, I thought to myself.

Plenty of character: 'I'll meet you at Hollywood Hardware'

T. J. Smoot

As a pilgrim to West Sacramento, I gradually came to realized that there's no town center, no place for people to protest, to rally around the flag, to meet for lunch. There's no bubbly fountain, no granite structure with blind justice standing viligantly in front. We just have "THE WORLD TRADE CENTER" at the end of Park Blvd. Ok, ok, they have a cement bridge over a man made creek. I'll give them five points for that. But it seems so..so..."blah." It's nice for an office building and all, but it doesn't do much else for me. It's not even close to anything, except the soda canning factory or maybe Stone Park. Where's the character in that? Good town centers gotta have character. I think that's what I'm looking for.

Woodland has that ominous neo-classic monolithic structure with massive columns. You know you're in proximity of some kind of town hub. When you're there it kinda leans over and says, "Hi bub, you're near the towns' center." Even downtown Davis has that statue in front of the Police station of those kids whose fingers would give you an inadvertent poke in the sternum or elsewhere if you weren't looking. I suppose if one were not looking and got a "poke," one's first thought would not be "Gee, I must be near the towns hub." But hey, it's part of the character of the town, and you remember it for its uniqueness.

I told a friend of mine a ways back that I had moved to this valley town of West Sacramento. Keith nodded knowingly and said, "Hollywood Hardwaaaaare!" I suppose he could've added "dude" to emphasize the value of this regional landmark, but just his knowing of this store's existence was significant since he never lived in Yolo county. I wasn't really aware of Hollywood Hardware's importance to this community until Sunday afternoons. As a homeowner, I became a Sunday afternoon projecteer. If you've ever had the occasion to embark on a leisurely fix-it project on Sunday, and soon realized that you had disassembled a 38 year old shower diverter and needed (you think) a washer, and that it was 3 p.m., you would be nodding right now in agreement. You would know that one of your options is to take the 25 mile round trip trek to Lumberjack or Home Depot, but then you would have to purchase a pound of washers, and if they didn't fit, you'd have to repeat this process until the "shower diverter god" decided that he'd had enough fun and let you stumble upon the right part.

Your other option is to get poked in the sternum by Hollywood Hardware.

This place has character, and character local to the community. It's not just that everyone in town comes through its doors at one time or another. It's the red styrofoam letters outside. It's the obscure items that sit on the shelves or hang in the wall corners that you'll only need once in a blue moon. If you want to buy one nut, you can buy one nut. You don't have to slap down plastic to get the 5000 valuenut pack which you'll never use up and will have to will to your grandkids. It's a smorgasbord of screws, fertilizer, lightbulbs, brooms, springs, and paint. You want nails? Get a bunch. Grab a rice bag and fill it up until you have enough. There's no tidy one-pound-see-through boxes here. The people, the parts, the lighting, and the smells create the total ambiance of a "real hardware store, the kind you'll remember in nostalgia. And when that unfortunate era comes of warehouse hardware stores fully obliterating all competition, we will all remember Hollywood Hardware as an integral part of West Sacramento's character.

'Fare deals' offered to local youths who want to ride the bus this summer

From Yolo County Transit Authority

The highly popular "Summer Sizzler" promotion by the Yolo County Transit Authority is back for its third year. Once again, the Transit Authority is able to offer reduced fares for YOLOBUS riders aged seventeen and under. Yolo County youth can purchase the YOLOBUS Summer Youth Pass for just ten dollars, and ride all the YOLOBUS regular routes from June 8 until September 2. Cash fares for this age group will be twenty-five cents per ride for the same period.

According to the Transit Authority's executive director, Terry Bassett, over 40,000 young riders utilized the YOLOBUS service last summer, up from 28,000 riders during the summer of 1993. "We're introducing many younger riders to transit as an alternative to cars, and for their parents, providing an alternative to the summer taxi."

There are some rules that apply (they're printed on the back of the passes) that all bus riders are expected to follow, and teenagers should carry proof of age. Also, kids under age eight years old should ride with someone at least twelve years old, and if you're planning on going out of town, you should get your parents' permission first. Passes are good only on YOLOBUS, and are not transferable.

Passes are on sale at all the city halls and at the Transit Authority office at the County Fair Mall in Woodland, or you can order a pass by mail. Call 661-0816 for pass information; call 1-800-371-2877 for bus schedule information. Schedules are available at all city halls and libraries, on the buses, many other places around the cities, and at the Transit Authority office.

This promises to be an exciting program offering youth all sorts of mobility opportunities for summer. Have a great summer vacation and use the transit system to its full advantage.

County-wide habitat plan to be aired in June 22 meet

The Steering Committee for the Yolo County Habitat Conservation Program (Yolo HCP) will convene a public meeting of the Yolo HCP Community Forum from 7 to 9:30 p.m. on Thursday, June 22, at the Yolo County Library, Davis Branch, Blanchard Room, 315 E. 14th Street (between B and F Streets) in Davis. The forum will hear and discuss the progress in the development of the countywide habitat conservation program.

The primary purpose of the meeting is to confirm the range of issues that have been identified, consider ecosystem and planning principles that will guide the development of the plan and hear and discuss alternative habitat plan strategies. The identified issues have been collected from input from the forum and general public, participation of the agencies cooperating on the plan and consideration of other habitat planning processes from around the state. Accepted ecosystem and planning principles that will guide the plan will be described by the consultant team. Alternative plan strategies will be presented and discussed with the forum and the general public in attendance. Meeting participants will be asked to provide their input both verbally and by completing a prepared questionnaire and comment form.

The Yolo County Habitat Conservation Program (HCP) is a cooperative effort between the cities of Davis, West Sacramento, Winters and Woodland; Yolo County; the University of California at Davis; the California Department of Fish and Game and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. The program seeks to develop a comprehensive approach to managing impacts to the habitats of sensitive threatened and endangered species in Yolo County. Based on the synthesis of technical information and input on issues and plan alternatives from the community forum and general public, a preliminary draft plan will be developed during the summer of 1995. Another community form/public workshop will be scheduled in early fall to receive input on the preliminary draft plan. It is anticipated that a final plan will be adopted by mid-1996. For more information on the HCP process or the community forum contact Mark Hamblin, Yolo County Community Development Agency, 292 W. Beamer Street, Woodland, 95659, at 666-8035.

OPINION

News-Ledger Editorial

Robbery, violence are neither normal nor acceptable

Recently a young man was shot to death during a robbery in Sacramento, despite not putting up any resistance to the robbers. As the cliche goes, it was a "senseless" killing, as opposed, perhaps, to a "sensible" one.

This week the News-Ledger talked to the manager of a local convenience market where juveniles and young adults regularly steal beer, openly, in a far more petty form of crime. It happens one or two times per week at this particular spot and nobody gets hurt.

At least, no one has yet.

Last week, a clerk was slightly roughed up in a "beer run" by several people. But with violence as unpredictable and life as cheap as they are in today's urban environment, isn't it only a matter of time until something worse happens?

Until, in the heat of the moment, a confrontation turns bloody?

Shoplifting is bad enough. But robbery can be downright dangerous.

We shouldn't have to live in a society where it is acceptable for teams of young people to distract a store clerk and flee brazenly with stolen merchandise. And any store that falls victim to such behavior once or twice a week ought to do whatever is necessary to curb it, even at the risk of inconveniencing honest customers or losing a few dollars in sales.

What Yolo County does about the abuse of its children severe and general neglect; total reports in 1993 were 4,153, with 1,760 having been considered reports of severe and general neglect; total reports in 1992 were 3,221, with 1,188 having been considered reports of severe and general neglect; and total reports in 1991 were 2,672, with 1,105 having been considered reports of severe and general neglect.

The law now provides valuable protection for children in danger, but it is the action of dedicated professionals that makes sure these protections are carried out. The Yolo County Department of Social Services Child Welfare Services carefully assesses every reported incident of child abuse and neglect. Some situations require an immediate in-person response within 24 hours. Non-emergency cases receive an in-person response within ten days. Children's Services works closely with law enforcement and other public agencies such as doctors and judges. There are 18 social worker positions in Yolo County Children's Services (two are in licensing); four more, hopefully, will be added soon.

Most people are becoming aware of the epidemic of violence against children, but are less familiar that much child abuse can be prevented and can be treated.

Early intervention and treatment can break the cycle and prevent recurrence. More emphasis is being placed on treatment programs that involve the entire family group, on-going support groups, and the coordination or existing services. Programs, such as the federally funded Family Preservation and Support Program, seek to keep families together whenever possible. When this is not possible, children need safe emergency shelters for the short-term and stable family placements for as long as needed. Approximately 300

I just wanted to say much thanks to Roland Hensley and the other city council members for bringing the bike lane issue back to the table. I've talked to at least one business who says it will be positive for the city and will help businesses by not having big trucks parked in front of their storefronts.

It's time for West Sacramento to start getting their future together and move forward.

My comment is about the O.J. trial. If everybody in West Sacramento were to call Channel 58 and tell them they do not want to see it anymore, maybe we can get it off the air.

Thanks, Raley's

Westmore Oaks Elementary School would like to thank everyone who helped make their Raley's and Bel Air receipt collection project such a tremendous success. They collected $454,365.00 in receipts and used them to order 232 new hard cover books for their library and two new software programs for their computer lab. The total receipts collected this year was over $100,000.00 more than last year and placed them in the top ten out of 456 schools who participated in the Partnership Education Program. Thank you to Raley's for this wonderful opportunity and to the Westmore Oaks community for its great success.

Taxes

This letter is about taxes and your money.

I read with interest a notice in our News-Ledger that the board of directors of the West Sacramento JPA (whatever that is?) will hold a public meeting on Wednesday, June 21, at 6:30 p.m. at the public library to talk about a proposed assessment on West Sacramento property for the next twelve years.

This assessment is to provide revenue for our share of the cost to operate and maintain a levee improvement project to bring us up to 400 year flood protection. I agree with this.

What I do not agree with is the amount of the assessment as proposed in the notice.

$0.15 per $100.00 of assessed valuation for twelve years amounts to $1800 or $150.00 per year if your property has an assessed value of $100,000.00. Consider, with the same assessed valuation you are already paying, per year, approximately $170.00 for Reclamation Dist. 900. N Delta Water and West Sac Landscape/Lighting.

The Port District would also dearly love to get their hand in your pocket.

I called Mr. Ruzich, manager of West Sacramento JPA (whatever that is?) and asked for some sort of clarification. Not much satisfaction. People that want tax payers money should go to a little bit of trouble. Put it on paper, explain why and what for, the actual cost, who or what other agency is also putting money, how much, where we are spending it, how long before completion. This is all basic information the taxpayer should know. Mr. Ruzich indicated he had nothing on paper but would answer any questions. It would e a nice gesture for Mr. Ruzich to prepare a brochure to pass out at the meeting or even mail. The taxpayers deserve a little service.

Lose the penny

Three "opinion" letters in the last month presented very logical arguments in favor of replacing our $1 bill with a $1 coin, including the one by Arizona's Rep. Jim Kolbe, sponsor of the One Dollar Coin Act of 1995/HR 534.

We should also consider total elimination of the penny and make the new $1 coin from the same copper, but from retooled mints. As we say goodbye to the $.1 piece that costs more to make than what it's worth, Rep. Kolbe's bill should be amended to not only eliminate the penny, but to also (officially) call for all sales/purchases to be rounded of to the nearest nickel; e.g., if purchase ends in $.6 or $.7, the last digit would be $.5, whereas if the last digit is $.8 or $.9, purchase is rounded off the next higher dime.

If the desire for currency smaller than a $5 bill somehow should persist, maybe our Treasury Department should begin printing the $2 bills en masse.

In the end, the cash register would lose the $1 bill and the penny; but it would gain (increased use of) the $2 bill and the new copper dollar with smooth edges. It would be called "adjusting for inflation."

West Sac committee leaning towards placement of new city hall downtown

By Steve Marschke

A West Sacramento city committee is favoring the placement of a future city hall within the current downtown area, said city manager Joe Goeden Tuesday.

The committee "started out looking at just something 'interim,' " said Goeden, "but then it started looking at more long term solutions."

It may ask the city council for more instructions on whether it should consider planning for a permanent solution to the city office space problem.

West Sacramento currently leases office space at the Port of Sacramento's headquarters (2101 Stone Blvd.) for most of city hall. The Fire Department leases offices on Cebrian, nearby. Public works, planning and parks and community services operate from a city-owned building on South River Road, and the redevelopment agency leases space on Jefferson Blvd.

Most of these agencies would come together under one roof in the proposed new city hall.

"What we'd essentially be trying to do is turn a lease payment into a mortgage payment," commented Goeden, describing the plan to build a new city-owned facility to replace the leased properties.

Goeden said he had heard that at least one committee member believed the city could issue to finance a new permanent city hall. But he added that he personally believed that would be difficult to do in a city which has yet to pass a school bond issue in several tries.

Parental education has been shown to be an important key in preventing child abuse. Parenting is still one of the most underrated jobs in our society, yet the future of our society in a very real sense lies with our children. Biological parenthood does not automatically confer the knowledge to provide the nurturing, support and leadership to help the child grow up to be a healthy and happy adult. Active parenting is a critical skill that can be learned, and a number of very good programs have been designed to achieve this goal. Some 30 non-profit agencies plus the county, local churches, school districts and the cities provide programs for children and their parents in this county.

A supportive community empowers families to nurture and protect their children. Child abuse is a concern of all of the residents of Yolo County, but many people are unclear as to the role they may play in helping to prevent child abuse. Local child abuse prevention organizations offer many opportunities for involvement. Lawmakers at every level of government should be made aware that protection and support of children and families deserve the highest priority. Incidents of abuse and neglect should be reported to the appropriate authorities.

Most important of all, we should join together to send a clear message that, as a community, we will not tolerate abuse and neglect of any of our children. Children are entitled to a safe and healthy childhood.

We must ensure that we do not lose sight of this promise in an era of partisan controversy and program cutbacks.

Yolo County 'Bookmobile' returns to bring books to your area in summer

From the Yolo County Library

Watch for the Yolo County Library Bookmobile, coming to your neighborhood one day each week this summer, beginning the week of June 12. The bookmobile is a mobile public lending library offering recreational reading for all ages. Books may be borrowed free for three weeks and can be returned to the bookmobile or any branch of Yolo County Library.

The bookmobile will visit the outskirts of West Sacramento on Tuesdays, with stops in Southport, Bryte-Broderick, and the Evergreen-Harbor area. Specific stops include Linden Park (at Summerfield), between 9 and 9:45 a.m.; Linden West, between 10 and 10:45 a.m.; Devon and Manchester Streets, between 11 and 11:45 a.m.; Bryte Park and Todhunter Street, between 12:45 and 1:30 p.m.; and the Sandalwood Apartments, located on Evergreen (east of Harbor), between 1:45 and 3:30 p.m.

Funding cuts experienced by the library in the past two years amounting to 30 percent of its operating budget caused the library to suspend the summer bookmobile in 1993. The vehicle was repaired by volunteers in 1994 and stayed in service for most of the summer of 1994. With its mechanical problems presumably solved and with support from the Davis Friends of the Library, the bookmobile will be on the road again this summer, including visits to neighborhoods on the outskirts of Davis. Computerization of library operations has also allowed the program to add more stops without increasing costs.

Yolo County Library purchased its first bookmobile in 1957. A replacement was acquired in 1975. Budget cuts following the passage of Proposition 13 forced the county library to close some branch libraries in 1978 and reduce the bookmobile program to a three-month summer schedule. Another round of budget cuts in 1993 forced suspension of the program that summer due to mechanical problems with the eighteen-year-old vehicle.

Volunteers did the necessary repairs and the summer program restarted in 1994. Despite its set-backs, the venerable bookmobile served over 400 people, with 3,456 books and magazine loans in the summer of 1994. The majority of bookmobile users are children. Some of the highest usage is at the farm labor housing centers and low-income housing complexes. A valid Yolo County Library borrower's card is required to check out materials.

The bookmobile carries approximately 2,200 books and magazines, including titles in Spanish and will be offering children prizes for participating in the county-wide Summer Reading Program. The program rewards young readers for achieving a self-set reading goal. The bookmobile and the Summer Reading Program are offered by the Yolo County Library. For more information, contact county librarian Mary L. Stephens or bookmobile coordinator Jay Johnstone at 666-8005.
